editor's note

We live in a society that's pushing us further and further into ourselves.

A cornered rat can bite a cat...they say but they also say a lot of other things about rats that are left to die and rot we've been pushed and shoved by bullies masquerading as friends and devoted lovers Fuck fakers! Fuck fakers! we chant in our little bubbles and there's definitely a whole lot of fuckin' and a lot of fakin' and just because we chant doesn't mean we don't do it too that's all it takes for us to stay in our caves we hoard the darkness of our times while hoping that the light from a little rectangle is going to illuminate our minds the little rectangle that tells us to love and tells us to like and tells us to type shit we don't mean just so people will love us and like us in return even if they don't mean it either

We live in a society that's pushing us further and further into ourselves.

We are confused and we don't want to admit it.
 We are lab rats lost in a maze because we forgot what cheese smells like.
 We are exhausted and exhausting ourselves even further by turning to short-term remedies that work for a while but then what? But then what?
 Then we wait. Then we find others who are also waiting.
 Then we talk about what to do about this whole situation and we wriggle out of denial together.
 We crawl out of our caves.
 We invent new expressions in which there's no reason for a rat to bite a cat because there won't be any corners to be backed into.

ON HER OWN TERMS

There she stood with a mop in her hand an attentive look on her face

The reflection in the mirror was not hers but that of a woman painting her lips

A woman knows that beauty is taught created, destroyed, reconstructed

And she, more than anyone, knows that beauty doesn't exist in the word beautiful

But sometimes she forgets sometimes she doesn't care most of the time her choices are Limited by expectations and there are too many expectations most of which are hardly ever fair

Eyes still fixed on the reflection fingers still curled around the mop she tried to think of an adjective other than

Red is a beautiful color but it is also mad proud bold

How much beauty does a red lipstick promise?
How often does it disappoint?

A smile with any other name would look as sweet

Sealed lips red or not would still create silence

And silence can be both beautiful and frightening

And it can conceal as much as it reveals like the silence that lingers

Between women who know nothing about each other
than the fact that

They are women.

Which is all they need to know to hear what isn't being said to understand what isn't being said

A mop, a lipstick, one expectation after another simple tools, hard consequences

Expectation
Oppression
Expectation
Oppression

She stood there and she knew she pressed her lips together and she knew those two words are more or less the same

For women who want to be women on their own terms.

I HAD A DOOR

The door that has been infested with termites has finally broken down. It has not been one year but apparently it is made out of hopes and dreams instead of concrete materials such as bricks and semen which are more grounded in nature.

Passersby who drop by to visit would declare how cold it is to live without a door especially in the rainy season but eh it never protected me from the chilling breeze from the nearby beach anyway; not unless I cling onto its bronze handles.

For the amount of comfort it provided me I would sometimes knock on it as a sign of dissatisfaction but it does not have a phone to tell me that some people from the city would steal its warmth before I have the chance to.

In a way I am grateful to be conditioned as someone who can stand the cold (which those city folks could never fathom as they can easily purchase heat packs from their neighbourhood's massage parlour.) at least I have no fear of dying to suspended animation.

As it was made out of metaphysical materials the door left no carcass for me to bury or cremate. It merely left a gaping hole in the front porch which exposed me to the warm sunlight. Maybe next time I will make the door myself instead of relying on the help of a digital carpenter.

FOR LOVERS

what stems shallower than my regrets is less shallow than what permeates from this bountiful scene so to this page deeper than any books I surrender; for affection is as subjective as lovers connecting on the shore and this feeling runs deeper than a grudge which is much deeper than what is absorbed from Light in this solitude from this book shallower than any pages I escape; for love is as objective as aesthetics are for a whore
